Dear [REDACTED]

My opinion remains the same. Her [REDACTED] is under control with medications. She continues to see [REDACTED] the psychiatrist for management of her mood disorders.

Dear [REDACTED]

Thank you for your email.

On Wednesday, 4 December 2019, the person presiding over the legal matter in which Ms Gobbo is involved will be making a decision on whether she is fit to give evidence.

In light of this timing, would it be possible for you to briefly explain in a reply email whether the opinions you expressed in your previous report have changed and, if so, how and why your opinion has changed? One or two sentences will suffice for present purposes. For ease of reference, we attach a copy of your previous report.

Once you have returned [REDACTED], we would be grateful if you could prepare a formal report responding to the questions set out in our letter of instruction of 22 November 2019.

Many thanks for your assistance.

Kind regards

Dear [REDACTED]

We are wondering whether you have had a chance to consider the attached letter which we sent to you last week.

We would be grateful for your earliest response.

Many thanks
